Wetlands Amendment, Subdivision Regulations

Zoning Ordinance Amendment Re: Junkyard

The Board reviewed definitions of junk and/or junkyard from Bristol, Laconia, Northwood and Deering. [See attachment] Most towns (including Ashland’s current ordinance) tailor their wording based on state regulations, primarily addressing commercial-style junkyards.

Of the samples presented, the Board was more in favor of Deering’s approach, which defines junk and distinguishes between commercial junkyards and (general) junkyards. We can use Deering’s language and restrictions (such as setbacks and screening) as a basis for discussion and adjust it to more closely suit Ashland’s landscape, needs and situation.

The Board’s purpose is to (1) address those properties that are creating health and safety hazards, eyesores and are diminishing property values, and (2) create wording that enables enforcement without being overly burdensome to property owners. Obvious health hazards are clearly covered under state health regulations and can be handled by the Health Officer, but general junk cannot necessarily be considered a health hazard.

The discussion was in preparation for consideration of the issue at Friday’s (November 21) Land Use Advisory Committee. After the Land Use Advisory Committee prepares the proposed wording, the draft would then go to a Planning Board public hearing for a warrant article to amend the Zoning Ordinance.
Updates on Other Potential or Pending Issues

- There has been no additional information from Kevin French (representing Brian Young) regarding construction of a pole-barn at the Exit 24 Storage business. (Pre-application consultation was held on September 24, 2014).

- Windows were recently being replaced at Adams Body Shop. It was questioned whether it was just a normal upkeep operation or whether there was some change in the business.

- Stacy Lucas will, at some point in the future, re-establish her Veggie Art Girl business at the former Nold property.

- Elliott Dupuis has converted storage space to function space and built a new porch, but has not been to the Planning Board to address the expanded footprint in a site plan review.

- 3 Lakes Landscaping (Colby Lenentine) was at the Planning Board in February 2013 regarding a sign, and was told that he needed a special exception and variance for his sign and landscaping business in a rural residential zone. He has never gone to the ZBA.

Planning Board Membership

The Board needs to find additional new members (regular and/or alternate) to fill out the Planning Board.

Conservation Commission

Sue MacLeod met with Renee Liebert to clear up communication issues between the Planning Board and Conservation Commission. Current members of the Commission are Renee Liebert, Harold Lamos, Kathleen DeWolfe, Dan Stack and Gordon McCormack Jr.

LRPC Update

Cheryl Cox, the new Ashland commissioner representative to LRPC, updated the Board on her recent meeting with Jeff Hayes, LRPC Director. She noted that there are many benefits and services (e.g., buying groups for office supplies, salt and sand) offered by LRPC that Ashland has not taken advantage of. Norm DeWolfe is now the representative to the Scenic Byways Committee; Eli Badger is now the representative to the Transportation Technical Advisory Committee (TAC) and David Toth will be appointed as the alternate to TAC. Cheryl will keep the town informed of any other committee representation that Ashland can fill. She has the recent broadband report prepared by LRPC.

The meeting was adjourned at 7:07 pm.
